Flower Delivery in DLF Phase 2 and Dilshad Garden – What's the Difference in the Processes?

The florist needs to be logistically flexible. Delivering to Dilshad Garden means navigating crowded residential blocks, while delivering to DLF Phase 2 means dealing with corporate security gates and high-rise protocols. The basic requirement of freshness is the same, but the execution is different.

Getting Around Different City Zones

When I order a Flower Delivery in DLF Phase 2, I always ensure that the delivery personnel are given the correct building block and the floor number of the recipient. DLF Phase 2 is very structured and delays are mostly at security checks. I always recommend leaving a note for the guard or receptionist.

Dilshad Garden on the other hand is a mix of independent houses and pocket apartments. Since parking and finding individual house numbers in the narrower lanes requires active coordination, I tell drivers to call the recipient a little early. I will also check the same-day delivery policies for wherever I'm sending it to make sure the timing is right for the recipient's schedule.

Frequent Asked Questions

Which flowers have the longest shelf life during delivery in Delhi?

Orchids and carnations will be in transit the longest.

From my own experience of delivering in peak Delhi summer, delicate flowers like tulips wilt within twenty minutes of coming out of an air-conditioned environment. But if I ship orchids or carnations, they retain their structure and their water, arriving at the customer's door looking as fresh as they did in the cooler.

Deliver at midnight?

Yes, midnight delivery is available but must be booked by 6 PM.

I do recall a customer wanting to surprise their spouse at exactly midnight on their first anniversary. I booked the delivery for early evening so that I could map out the route to perfection, skirting the barricades of the night, and presenting the bouquet just as the clock struck midnight.

What do I do to care for the flowers when they arrive?

Cut the stems at a 45 degree angle and change the water every two days.

“Whenever I am given a new batch of roses, I immediately cut the bottoms on the diagonal. This increases the surface area to take up water. I once had a bunch of regular red roses that looked fresh for almost two weeks by just changing the water in the vase regularly and keeping it out of direct sunlight.

Yes, you can customize your floral arrangement.

Yes, you can request specific flowers, colours and wrapping.

I work with clients that often have very specific visions. For example, a client recently requested a corporate bouquet in only their brand colours, blue and white. I found some blue orchids and white lilies which I set in a bespoke geometric wrap which worked beautifully with their corporate identity.
